presentations that take place on two stages throughout the day, as well as hands-on family activities, cultural displays and demonstrations, glass-blowing, blacksmithing, weaving, pottery and other traditional arts, crafts, and more. Young Audiences of Virginia joins the event in sponsoring performers presenting living history, interactive magic, and musical presentations that engage the audience with the past.

While this family-friendly event is filled with entertainment and fun, there is a greater purpose to the day's activities as noted by Hampton History Museum executive director Luci Cochran, "Our goal is not just to "show" and "tell" but to honor those who came before us and focus learning from each other in a spirit of healing. We believe it is a great day if people attending our event gain understanding of who we are from our past and each other - so that we walk away knowing more about our neighbors, ourselves and our community."

The day's events commence with a Native American Thanksgiving address in the Tuscarora (Skarure') Language from Greg "Two Hawks" Stephenson, a member of the Meherrin Nation (Kauwets'a:ka - People of the Water). An African Libation ceremony offered by Chadra Pittman Walke of The Sankofa Projects accompanied by an African drumming ensemble will honor the ancestors. Hampton Mayor Donnie Tuck will welcome those assembled to the day's activities.

Greg and Diane Stephenson will invite attendees to join in Iroquois welcome and social dances. An ensemble of Chickahominy dancers will perform a variety of ceremonial dances in traditional and contemporary regalia.

Demonstrations of Native American arts and crafts include pottery, beadwork, wampum making, twined basketry, quillwork, and gourd art.

Highlights of colonial-era life include several forges operated by the Tidewater Blacksmiths Guild, woodcarving, leather work and open-fire cooking demonstrations. Using their mobile hot box and portable studio, the Missoula School of Hot Glass will create glass vessels and objects on site.

people who contributed to making Virginia. “Come Freedom Come,” a living history presentation by actress Valerie Davis relates the true story of Marth Ann Fields, who escaped from slavery with eight children to Fort Monroe, and whose legacy lives on today. In “Weaving Beauty” artist Louise Dawkins introduces the history and practice of weaving through demonstrations and hands-on participation with visitors.

The Contraband Historical Society is bringing a full-scale replica of a Contraband cabin, not unlike the houses created by slaves who escaped to Fort Monroe during the Civil War. Neighborhoods of similar cabins sprang up in Hampton offering the formerly enslaved their first personal homes and private space.

Hampton History Museum educator Kris Peters will lead an activity about historical dwellings where children can try their hand at building techniques used by Native American, Africans and European colonists.

An exhibit about Native American education and life at Hampton Institute (now Hampton University) featuring dozens of historical photographs also will be displayed.
