Hampton, Virginia- Hampton native and public historian Conover Hunt talks about how she turned history into mystery for her novel The Constitution Murders at the Hampton History Museum's free "Lunch in Time" series event on Wednesday, August 15, noon-1:00 p.m.

The Constitution Murders is Hunt's first novel, her ninth book. The publisher calls it, "a pulse-pounding whodunit." Readers will recognize many Virginia places and family names. The author has published earlier nonfiction books about James and Dolley Madison, women's history, and the Madison home, Montpelier in Orange, VA. This book takes place in 2011 with flashbacks to the era of the 1812 war with Great Britain.

It starts with a headless torso found aboard the deck of the USS Constitution in Boston.

All along the East Coast, someone has evaded sophisticated security systems to break into thirteen of America's most iconic historic sites.

Female protagonist Cary Mallory was raised in Hampton by her crabmeat-processor grandfather Captain Johnny Mallory. Trained as a public historian turned American antiques dealer, she is working in Church Hill in Richmond, when a murder involving the Madison estate, Montpelier, lures her into an international search for the identity of the victim and the perpetrators of the crime.

The complex plot features real and fictional characters from the National Park Service and the Department of Homeland Security, Russian aristocrats, Texas heiresses, Mexican drug lords, museum officials, and genetic scientists.

Hunt will sign books after her talk. The book is available in the museum gift shop for $12.99.

Admission is free. Attendees are encouraged to bring a bag lunch. The museum will have free dessert.
