and view displays chronicling Hampton's experiences during the American Revolution, War of 1812, Civil War, WW I & WWII and other conflicts, along with the special displays "NASA: Hampton Takes Flight," celebrating the city's role in aeronautical development and space exploration, and "When the Computer Wore a Skirt: NASA's Human Computers" that tells the story behind the hit film and best-selling book "Hidden Figures."

Also on display on the museum's second floor is the travelling exhibit "Pirates, Privateers and Buccaneers." In commemoration of the 300th anniversary the death of the notorious Blackbeard this exhibit on loan from the South Carolina State Museum, tells the story of Blackbeard, who blockaded Charleston Harbor in 1718 prior to his death in North Carolina, along with the stories of many other pirates.

The exhibit will thrill those who have always been fascinated by these desperadoes of the seas. It will dispel a number of popular myths about pirates, such as that they made their victims walk the plank, and used phrases such as 'arrgh,' and 'matey,' which are fictions of Hollywood. This exhibit will also address the problem of modern piracy dispelling another popular myth that pirates disappeared a long time ago.

When approached by North Carolina merchants seeking help in breaking up piracy along the Outer Banks, Virginia Governor Alexander Spotswood sent the Royal Navy, under the command of Lieutenant Robert Maynard, to capture Blackbeard. After the pirate was killed in a battle off the coast of North Carolina on November 22, 1718, Lieutenant Maynard had his head removed and hung from the bowsprit of his sloop. Oral tradition holds that on arrival in Virginia, the head was hung from a pole at the mouth of the Hampton River as a warning to others who might be tempted by piracy. The head remained for some time and the site continues to be known as Blackbeard's Point today.
